Abstracts

Having contracted during 2019, processed fruit and vegetables packaging returned to growth during 2020. With consumers spending more time at home during the year, they prepared and ate more meals there. Moreover, COVID-19 drove heightened consumer interest in health and wellness, particularly weight management, as consumers became aware that obesity raised their risk of developing severe symptoms if they contracted the virus. This led local some local consumers to eat more processed fruit and ve...
