Abstracts

2020 saw a surge in growth in packaging volumes in processed fruit and vegetables in the US, as COVID-19 led consumers to stock up on such products due to fears of supply chain disruption. Moreover, some consumers shifted from fresh fruit and vegetables to processed fruit and vegetables because they feared that the former might be a vector for contagion. However, with the easing of restrictions, in 2021 consumers did not continue to stockpile, and felt much more comfortable leaving their homes t...
