Abstracts

Many consumers are spending more time at home due to restrictions on movement intended to curb the spread of COVID-19. Children did not attend school for an extended period, and many employees are still working from home. As a result, consumers are eating more at home, and this will fuel a surge in both retail volume sales and retail current value sales of processed meat and seafood during 2020. While volume sales of processed fish and seafood through the foodservice sales will see a sharp decli...
