Abstracts

Lockdown measures, including restrictions on movement outside the home and the closure of foodservice outlets, the move to remote working and distance learning, and concerns about exposure to the COVID-19 virus in public settings served to increase the prevalence of home cooking when the pandemic first hit China in 2020. This had a positive impact on sales of processed meat and seafood, serving to boost the performance of its packaging. The fact that people continued to work and study during the...
