Abstracts

There was a modest acceleration in demand growth for processed meat and seafood packaging during 2020. Due to COVID-19, consumers spent more time at home during the year and prepared and ate more meals there, but the positive impact of this was partly offset by the economic uncertainty engendered by the pandemic, which led many local consumers to rein in their discretionary spending. Demand growth was particularly strong for larger pack sizes in processed meat and seafood, as some consumers boug...
