Abstracts

Prior to the pandemic, processed meat and seafood packaging was in decline. This category then enjoyed a spike in demand in 2020, boosting its packaging unit volumes, given the products were ideal for stockpiling prior to lockdowns as well as for home cooking during them. However, in 2021, processed meat and seafood was back in decline, which continued in 2022. This negatively impacted the unit volumes of a number of key pack types, including flexible plastic and metal food cans, in the packagin...
