Abstracts

After seeing exceptional growth in 2020, packaging volumes of processed fruit and vegetables declined in Sweden in 2022, as consumer habits returned to normal following the pandemic. When the pandemic emerged, fears of viral transmission kept consumers at home, which boosted home cooking and prompted consumers to purchase foods such as processed fruit and vegetables in bulk. As the impacts of the pandemic eased, consumers returned to their normal lives outside of the home, driving declines in vo...
