Abstracts

In 2022, total volumes of processed meat and seafood packaging saw a slight decline, sliding after a couple of years of strong growth over the pandemic years. However, metal food cans witnessed a slight increase in its pack type share, for a few reasons. Metal food cans are considered to be durable and resistant to physical damage, ensuring that the contents remain protected during transportation and handling. They also protect processed meat and seafood from exposure to sunlight, moisture and o...
