Abstracts

Although peas and other pulses have a presence in Vietnam, availability is low and sales are still very small. The use of peas and other pulses is limited to a few dishes, and these products do not have wide consumer awareness. By contrast, beans are a familiar food in Vietnamese cuisine, with various applications in the daily cooking of meals and light snacking, and are also increasingly used to make a number of fashionable new dishes, such as milk tea with red beans. They are also regarded as...
