Abstracts

Although foodservice outlets were closed or only offering limited services when COVID-19 hit the United Arab Emirates in 2020, local consumers had more time on their hands due to lockdowns or home seclusion, enabling them to prepare meals themselves. However, given many were still working, albeit from home, there was also a need for quick and convenient meal solutions such as ready meals, which helped maintain demand for these products. Fatigue with preparing one's own meals was also setting in...
