Abstracts

Sales of retail adult incontinence products are expected to increase in Western Europe, due to its ageing population. In addition to demographics, efforts by manufacturers to improve understanding around incontinence and to develop more discreet, absorbent and comfortable products are expected to drive growth. Whilst health and beauty specialist retailers dominate sales, internet retailing is expected to gain further ground thanks to the discretion and convenience that it offers.

Euromonitor International's Retail Adult Incontinence in Western Europe global briefing offers an insight into to the size and shape of the tissue and hygiene market, highlights buzz topics, emerging regions, countries and categories as well as pressing industry issues and white spaces.
