Abstracts

St. Petersburg carries less weight in Russia's economy compared with Moscow; the city adds only 5% to the country's GDP compared with Moscow's 27%. At the same time, St. Petersburg is an important urban agglomeration and has a sizeable affluent population; in 2012, the city had more than 60,000 households with income of above US$100,000. The city's economic activity is primarily focused on manufacturing and commerce, with each sector comprising just under 30% of St. Petersburg's GVA.
