Abstracts

Rising production costs and supply chain pressures forced companies to increase their retail prices. While price offers and promotions remained regular and aggressive, all brands and SKUs' retail prices were subject to hikes. While this led to substantial retail value sales growth, consumer behaviour adapted. In response to the hikes, women started to look for better deals and discounts. As such, while consumers remained brand loyal, with there being a lack of strong migration to private labels; Euromonitor International's Sanitary Protection in Greece report offers a comprehensive guide to the size and shape of the market at a national level.
