Abstracts

Following a two-year period of decline, sauces, dips and condiments returned to positive growth in retail volume terms in 2023. In 2021 and 2022, demand was negatively impacted by disruptions to the global supply chain, which pushed up production costs, and therefore unit prices. This was due to a combination of the lingering effects of the pandemic and the ongoing war in Ukraine, while another wave of COVID-19 in China also contributed to already strained supply chains. However, with food infla...
