The healthy nutrition trend continued to strengthen in 2017, with consumers becoming more aware of the high calorie content and low quality of ingredients in many sauces. As a result, many looked for healthier alternatives to dress salads and season foods. In addition, locals also sought out new and unique flavours, while trying to cook dishes with minimal time and effort. These trends can be seen in the notable shift from dips and ready-to-eat tahini to raw tahini, which can then be customised...
