Abstracts

In 2020, COVID-19 home seclusion led to an increase in at-home consumption. As consumer foodservice outlets closed their doors for much of the year, and consumers were forced to spend more time at home, there was a rise in home cooking throughout Canada. Both to fill the time as well as out of necessity, Canadian consumers cooked a lot more of their own meals because of the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, leading to a rise in the consumption of products in sauces, dressings and condiments, which are...
