Soup in Germany declined in current value terms in 2017 for the eighth year in a row, although the rate of decline was the lowest compared to the previous years. This was partly due to the rather good development of shelf-stable soup, which due to investments by the key players continued to show growth. Chilled and frozen soup saw the most dynamic growth in current value terms which was due to the continued decline in dehydrated and instant soup. These categories are considered to be old-fashion...
