Abstracts

Leading up to the start of the lockdown in March rumours spread that there would be supply shortages which had the result of consumers rushing to grocery retailers to stock up on essentials such as rice, pulses, fruit and vegetables. However, this stockpiling was not limited to staple foods with many households also stocking up on a range of long-life packaged food, including packaged soup. This was partly due to concerns over supplies of staple foods running out, but also because of the conveni...
