Abstracts

COVID-19 is expected to benefit soup, with significantly higher retail volume growth than in 2019, where warmer weather than usual in the winter months dampened retail volume sales. The big jump in retail volume expected in 2020 reverses an overall decline over the review period. With people having time to cook at home and packaged soup considered to be relatively expensive, manufacturers responded with aggressive promotion and generous price discounts in 2020. As a result, unlike other packaged...
