Abstracts

Staple foods in Singapore continued to experience marginally higher average unit prices from the lingering effect of the inflationary wave in 2022. Climate change and geopolitical risks further impacted global food production and supply chains, placing pressure on an import-reliant market such as Singapore. In particular, baked goods, pasta and noodles experienced strong price increases in 2023, due to the high inflationary pressures on the cost of wheat, which is a key ingredient. The high cost...
