The shortage of cash in Venezuela has led to a situation whereby consumers are paying electronically for small products such as hot dogs. Due to the effects of high inflation, the lack of banknotes was so severe in 2017 that banks only allowed withdrawals of up to VEF20,000 per day per person. Therefore, daily transactions became more complex operations. For example, the owner of a street/stall kiosk could accept a post transaction payment agreed with the client, simply having to trust them. Acc...
