Abstracts

Like fine wines/champagne and spirits and premium and luxury cars, super premium beauty and personal care remained fairly resilient to the impact of COVID-19 in Canada. While sales declined in 2020, the rate was not as steep as for other luxury goods categories in the country as consumers largely maintained spending on skin care products driven by trends in pampering and self-care. With beauty salons being closed for several months of the years and consumers having more time at home, there were...
