Abstracts

Eastern Europe is home to the highest level of tea consumption in the world, which helped it to reach annual retail sales of USD4 billion in 2016. The region is led by Russia, where black tea was able to ride out years of economic difficulties to keep growth positive. Elsewhere, newer forms of tea, such as green tea, are starting to take share from traditional black tea in countries such as Poland.

Euromonitor International's Tea in Eastern Europe global briefing offers an insight into to the size and shape of the Hot Drinks market, highlights buzz topics, emerging geographies, categories and trends as well as pressing industry issues and white spaces.
