Abstracts

The number of outbound departures declined by 2% in 2013. International travel is not as common among Greeks as among other Europeans. There are many Greeks who have never left the country, with a good proportion not having any interest in travelling abroad. Apart from the Greek perception of international travel, a major obstacle to growth for outbound tourism is the price of flights. As demand for foreign tourism is rather low, the frequency of flights to other destinations is not...
