Abstracts

The market for traditional toys and games in Indonesia registered a weak performance in current value terms in 2023, when compared to the previous year. Sales were impacted by inflationary pressures, mainly due to higher food and energy costs. While the rate of inflation began to ease during the second half of 2023, Indonesians remained cautious with their discretionary spending, prioritising essential needs over leisure and entertainment expenses, including on traditional toys and games. This s...
