Abstracts

After the president's decision to postpone the legislative elections in April 2012, the political situation once again became tense in the country. In the spring of 2013, there were protests across the country, with hundreds of injured persons. The September 2013 parliamentary elections ended the political transition. At the end of September, these elections resulted in victory for the president's party. The opposition contested the results, although, at the same time, the government tried to...
