Abstracts

In January 2014, the Federal Government devaluated the Argentinean Peso by 30% against the US dollar over two days, with the exchange rate reaching ARS8 per dollar. This significant devaluation, made without an integral plan to tidy the country's economy, means that industry players expect that high inflation (far above 30% expected in 2014 according to private consultant firms) will erase any devaluation benefits such as an increase in incoming tourism flows. On the other hand, consumers with...
