Abstracts

A state of famine was declared in parts of Somalia by the United Nations in the summer of 2011 and continued over the course of 2012 and 2013, the first official declaration of such an event in the 21st century. Already hampered by insecurity and violence in the country, famine is compounding the misery of the local population. Under such conditions the development of travel and tourism in Somalia has been put on hold until the basic needs of its citizens are met.
