Abstracts

In 2030, the population of the UK will reach 69.5 million, an increase of 7.2% from 2015. Net migration will continue to be the main driver of population growth over this period as natural change plummets. Although ageing, the UK's median age will remain younger than Western Europe as a whole in 2015-2030 due to its comparatively high birth and net migration rates. London will continue to dominate the urban landscape and will account for around one in six urban residents in 2030.
