Abstracts

After the COVID-19 crisis, the demand for vitamins shrunk. With a significant reduction in COVID-19 cases and less severe disease, consumers withdrew their attention from vitamins, especially those that they did not have the habit of regularly consuming before the pandemic. Coupled with the loss of interest, another important reason to drop vitamins is the impact of high inflation on consumers' budgets. As the threat from COVID-19 diminished and consumers became more budget conscious, prevention...
