Abstracts

The market size of vitamins is projected to continue to decrease over 2023, following spikes in demand in 2020 and/or 2021. After two years of record-high retail volume sales, the category has lost momentum, which is only logical given heightened demand as consumers looked for vitamins for immunity and general health to offer resistance to Coronavirus (COVID-19). Such fast growth in demand is hard to sustain, even with a wider consumer base taking vitamins than before the COVID-19 pandemic. Inde...
