Abstracts

The pandemic period that ushered in a boom for vitamin sales is coming to a close. Many consumers have placed the COVID-19 period in the rear-view mirror and are looking ahead to a world where the SARS-CoV-2 virus is not a constant worry. The preventive measures taken at the height of the pandemic, which translated into large purchases of vitamins to support and strengthen immunity and build up defences against potential infection, are no longer being practised. Instead, consumers are increasing...
