Abstracts

During the outbreak of COVID-19, consumers were buying vitamin products as a preventive measure. In addition, there was a widespread belief that Vitamin C could enhance the immune system and reduce the risk of contracting COVID-19. However, with the substantial decline of COVID-19, most consumers have reverted to purchasing vitamins based on specific needs to address deficiencies. This shift is driven by the rising cost of living and a decline in disposable income, forcing consumers to allocate...
