Abstracts

Following a remarkable surge in demand for vitamins during the peak of the pandemic, growth remained fairly modest in retail volume terms in 2023. While vitamins remain a staple in many Polish households, the immense initial demand set a high baseline, rendering subsequent growth more modest. With COVID-19 becoming an increasingly manageable illness, there was a palpable reduction in fear amongst Poles, leading to a decline in the stockpiling of vitamin supplies. However, the long-term health co...
