Abstracts

Vitamins saw exceptional growth during 2020, the first year of the COVID-19 crisis, thanks to a strong consumer focus on preventive health and a desire to boost the functioning of immune systems. This exceptional growth meant limited growth opportunities in subsequent years (as consumption was already at an unprecedented level). However, a continued focus on preventative health meant that retail volume sales of vitamins did increase slightly in 2022 and 2023. While the immediate threat COVID-19...
