Abstracts

Washington has more to offer than being "a government city". It is one of the most post-industrial metropolises in the US. Business services is the leading sector in the city's economy, claiming an outstanding 46% of local GVA in 2012. Washington also boasts the largest disposable income per household among the nation's 10 largest metropolitan areas. At the same time, income distribution is notably more equal in Washington than in the remaining US.
