Abstracts

Meal replacement is set to see a much bigger drop in retail volume sales in 2023, compared with the strong decreases recorded over 2020-2022. Meal replacement struggles to gain traction as above-average inflation rates and rising prices force consumers to focus on essential purchases, such as groceries, but also health and wellness supplements offering immunity benefits. Consumers, especially younger ones, are also more knowledgeable and conscious about health and wellness and nutrition, and the...
