Abstracts

Wipes are extremely underdeveloped in Kenya, with close to all sales generated by baby wipes. There are no visible sales of household products; in addition, the consumer base is limited to urban middle- and upper-income consumer bases with higher disposable incomes, who are willing to try new products. A flurry of launches in recent years has widened the choice of brands, making wipes more accessible to lower income groups, as well as bringing more sustainable options into Kenya. Local brand Sof...
