Abstracts

Womenswear continued to see positive current value growth in 2023, although this was mainly driven by inflation and retail price increases. Inflationary pressure began to surge in 2022 following the start of the war in Ukraine. Consumer confidence remains curbed in 2023, with some consumers limiting shopping expenses and choosing to save money given the economic downturn. As a result, retail volume sales of womenswear have witnessed further decline in 2023.

Euromonitor International's Womenswear in Denmark report offers a comprehensive guide to the size and shape of the market at a national level. It provides the latest retail sales data 2018-2022 and analysis by distribution format allowing you to identify the sectors driving growth.
