Abstracts

Sales of women's apparel are expected to maintain a stable, positive growth trajectory in 2023. Although growth may slightly lag behind the previous year, factors such as inflation, price increases, favourable weather, and a return to workplaces are prompting more women in the Netherlands to refresh their wardrobes. However, concerns over higher living costs, inflation, and environmental impacts are leading to a shift in demand towards the second-hand market.

Euromonitor International's Womenswear in Netherlands report offers a comprehensive guide to the size and shape of the market at a national level. It provides the latest retail sales data 2018-2022 and analysis by distribution format allowing you to identify the sectors driving growth.
