Abstracts

Even before the onset of the pandemic, retail constant value sales (2022 prices) of writing instruments had been in decline due to the increased use of digital devices—particularly smartphones. Disruption arising from COVID-19 restrictions (particularly the closure of educational institutions for an extended period) served to deepen this trend in 2020, and while retail constant value sales stabilised in 2021, they resumed their long-term decline in 2022.
