Abstracts

For years, their voices went unheard. And their opinions were ignored. But not anymore.

Thanks to the internet and social media, there is a growing and vocal group of Key Opinion Leaders (KOLs) who are not necessarily academics or people who talk at conferences. Rather, they are bloggers, pundits and healthcare professionals whose voices and expertise-once largely behind the scenes-are now being amplified on the internet. While pharma has traditionally looked askance upon the free-form, interactive nature of social media as a marketing tool, companies who continue to ignore its power may be doing so at their peril.

Report Overview

FirstWord Dossier's new report on KOL Relationship Development: Leveraging Social Media Platforms is a compelling examination of the rise of social media as an informal, but increasingly important interactive marketing tool. Critically, it looks at social media-based KOLs who, although traditionally dismissed by the conservative pharmaceutical industry, are coming from behind the scenes to be heard. The report, based on six in-depth expert interviews and additional research, examines the trends, options and issues surrounding social media KOLs, how to identify them and how best to capture their voices. Engagingly written and current, the report addresses how the industry can best adapt marketing strategies to the digital age-and how to track their success.

Key quotes

“The idea is just to give a place where people can interact in a healthy way and try to provide information that is beneficial to them. I know it's a really vague goal, but that's really what it's about. If we get people to talk about [our product], then we've done well.”

- Gil Ben-Dov, former Vice-President, Social Media Strategy, ResMed

“Rather than thinking in terms of I have a message to push out, you should be thinking in terms of people using my product, how can I help them use it better, to understand their needs and understand my own product better. That's social media; it's a different type of interaction.”

- Dr Felix Jackson, Chief Medical Officer, medDigital

“Social media is an amplifier, where everybody in their own niche can be world-class. And there's an opportunity for pharma companies to partner with these informal opinion leaders to educate, do research and work toward getting better healthcare outcomes.”

- Craig DeLarge, Director, Healthcare Professional Relationship Marketing, Novo Nordisk
