HIV drug market barriers: A help or a hindrance?

Today's tightly packed European HIV drug landscape is the culmination of numerous innovative developments over the last three decades. New market entrants continue to arrive – the most recent from Gilead – hoping to disrupt the status quo. But how are market barriers impacting prescribing choices, and what effect does that have on market share? Are newer players changing market dynamics?

Use this latest report to understand the barriers driving market share shifts. Market Access Impact: HIV (EU5) features 9 big-hitter named HIV drugs from Gilead, Janssen Cilag, Merck Sharp & Dohme, BMS and ViiV Healthcare.

TOP TAKEAWAYS

Visibility isn't the problem: The proportion of physicians claiming not to know about these 9 HIV brands is negligible. With such high awareness, what else is impacting prescribing behaviour?

It's not plain sailing for some: Some drugs have very few prescribing barriers, however 1 in 10 physicians say this drug has 3 or more barriers. Which drug?

The devil is in the detail: 17% of EU prescribing decisions are affected by market barriers, but no single barrier stands out from the rest. Find out how to fine tune strategy in a tight-knit market.

New kids on the block: How does prescribing of recent market entrants compare to more established drugs? Which market barriers are already associated with Descovy and Genvoya?
