Abstracts

Ferrochrome is an alloy composed of chromium and iron, with a variable percentage of carbon, silicon, and other impurities. It is produced by using high carbon content ferrochromium, silicochromium, or chromite ore in the presence of carbon (coke) and a fluxing agent such as lime. The process of producing ferrochrome is known as the smelting process. Ferrochrome is widely used in the production of stainless steel due to its high corrosion resistance properties. It helps in enhancing the strength and durability of the steel and makes it resistant to heat, oxidation, and erosion. It is also used in the production of other alloys such as superalloys, nichrome, and refractory materials. The global ferrochrome market size is projected to grow by USD 7.9 billion from 2023 to 2029, registering a CAGR of 6.04 percent, according to the latest market data.
