In the AGC market, pin hook carts dominate with a 58.3% revenue share in 2022. These carts are expected to experience an 82.6% revenue growth by 2029. They use pin hooks to engage with carts, making them cost-effective with basic navigation technology like optical or magnetic line navigation. Magnetic guidance is the most popular navigation system, utilizing a magnetic flux sensor and guide belts. Laser-guided AGCs operate efficiently without physical assistance, making them ideal for cross-docking, sortation, and storage functions. AGCs with a load capacity of up to 0.5 tons hold the largest market share. The warehouse and logistics sector is the primary application segment due to the increasing volume of online purchases and the need for efficient warehousing. AGCs automate the movement of goods, reducing manual tasks and optimizing operations. The financial and operational benefits of AGCs drive their adoption in warehouses globally.

In 2022, APAC accounted for 37.6% of the global AGC market revenue, driven by flourishing economies and new manufacturing units by global OEMs. Technological advancements in AGCs have improved performance and system utilization. The booming e-commerce industry in APAC fuels the demand for AGCs as companies prioritize automation to meet consumer expectations. Europe is a major exporter and producer of AGCs, driven by the adoption of professional and industrial service robots and the demand for material handling solutions. Ongoing advancements in robot technology contribute to the development of advanced automation machinery in Europe.
