Medical imaging informatics, also referred to as radiology informatics or imaging informatics, is responsible for storing, managing, and accessing image-related information and data. The specific goal of imaging informatics is to improve patient care by better managing imaging data and making it as accurate and accessible as possible. In a medical setting, imaging technologists are responsible for performing X-ray, ultrasound, mammography, computed tomography (CT), and magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) exams. Imaging informaticists then serve as the bridge between those technologists, doctors, and IT professionals by collecting, sorting, and storing the images in the facility's database. The global medical imaging informatics market is anticipated to increase by USD 3.2 billion till 2029 at an average annual growth of 6.7 percent as per the latest market estimates.
