Pumps raise, drive, exhaust, or compress fluids or gases using pistons, plungers, or rotating vanes. They also convert electrical energy into hydraulic energy. The global pumps market is projected to reach USD 59.7 billion by 2029, growing at a CAGR of over 3.5% from 2023 to 2029. This growth is driven by infrastructure projects, modular construction, and demand for efficient pump technologies. The market is divided into centrifugal and positive displacement pumps. Centrifugal pumps find wide applications in various industries and are in demand in developing nations for water supply infrastructure. Asia-Pacific, Europe, and North America will witness significant pump demand, while the Middle East & Africa, Latin America, and APAC will experience growth in water and wastewater infrastructure. Increased capital investment in developing countries allows vendors to expand and upgrade manufacturing facilities. Mining activities in China and India boost pump output. APAC pump sales rely on capital expenditure by industries and construction projects. The centrifugal pumps market offers opportunities in the aftermarket segment due to strong demand in the global mining market. Wastewater management strategies and legislation drive demand for water treatment plants in developing countries. The prefabricated buildings market in North America and Europe drives demand for industrial pumps. Advanced technologies like remote monitoring facilities fuel growth in the global pumps market. Challenges include fluctuations in raw material prices, tariffs, commodity shortages, and currency exchange rates.

Centrifugal pumps dominate the market, with a projected CAGR of 3.9%. These pumps are popular due to their versatility in handling different pressures and loads, as well as their cost-effective maintenance. Positive displacement pumps will also experience increased demand, particularly in challenging environments like the chemical industry. The industrial pumps market is primarily driven by the oil and gas industry, specifically refineries. However, growth in this sector may be limited by government regulations and pollution reduction initiatives. Centrifugal pumps find wide applications in hydrocarbon processing, refineries, water injection, and pipelines. The growing refining capacity and recovery of oil prices will contribute to the demand. Additionally, the expansion of the oil and gas sector, including offshore projects, will drive the need for submersible pumps.

Asia-Pacific is the leading region, fueled by substantial capital spending and construction expenditure. China and India are investing in sectors like oil, pesticides, and food and beverages. Water infrastructure development is also a significant driver. North America has a strong demand for pumps due to the construction industry and investments in the oil and gas sector. The United States, with its process manufacturing companies and water supply plants, holds the third-largest market share. The post-pandemic construction boost and ongoing industrial and commercial development will further propel the pumps market in the region.

Competitive Landscape
