After-Death Cleaning Service, also known as death scene purification or post-mortem cleaning, is a highly specialized and humane technical service. Its core task is to systematically, thoroughly, and safely clean, disinfect, and restore the location where the deceased was buried after forensic or relevant departments have completed the necessary procedures. The service includes not only removing biological contaminants but also eliminating odors, restoring the environment to a habitable state, and strictly adhering to biosafety standards and ethical guidelines. This service is a crucial link between forensic procedures and the family's return to daily life.

Prices for after death cleaning services vary significantly globally, starting at around $500 for basic services and reaching thousands or even tens of thousands of dollars for complex or traumatic scenes. Major costs include high-level protective equipment, specialized cleaning and disinfection agents, compliant disposal of special waste, high-risk personnel, and substantial insurance premiums. The industry typically boasts high profit margins, usually between 50% and 70%.
