To address the high costs of hardware trial and error, unpredictable system complexity, and uncontrollable deployment risks in traditional quantum network construction, Aliro Test Services emerged. Since the early 21st century, with the gradual maturation of quantum network simulation technology and software-defined architecture, the field of quantum communication and network testing has made significant progress. Currently, Aliro Test Services has evolved into a comprehensive service covering full-stack quantum network simulation, hardware-in-the-loop verification, entanglement distribution protocol testing, noise environment modeling, and automated network orchestration. It is widely used in quantum secure communication deployment, data center interconnect verification, quantum network construction for government and defense agencies, infrastructure assessment for telecom operators, and quantum computing interconnect research, significantly reducing R&D risks, accurately evaluating system performance, and ensuring the secure deployment of quantum networks.
