Abstracts

The global Animal Care Services market size is expected to reach $ 264536 million by 2032, rising at a market growth of 5.1% CAGR during the forecast period (2026-2032).

Animal care services are a comprehensive system providing health management and daily care for pets and some commercially owned animals, including grooming, disease prevention, nutritional management, boarding, and rehabilitation. This service is typically provided by professional pet care institutions, veterinary hospitals, or chain pet service companies, combined with basic veterinary services and behavioral training support, providing health protection throughout the animal's lifespan. It has evolved from traditional care into a standardized and professional service industry.

With the increasing number of pets and the rising status of pets in households, animal care services are rapidly developing towards high-end and medical-oriented services. Urbanization and the rise of the single-person economy are driving pet consumption growth, continuously expanding the demand for care, while the trend of combining insurance and medical care is strengthening. In the future, the industry will develop towards digital health monitoring, chain branding, and AI health management, forming a comprehensive service ecosystem of 'pet medical care + nursing + insurance.'
